

Rol de la terapia Ocupacional en los procesos de reparación a víctimas de la violencia.

MARIBEL MORENO SOSA¹

¹INSTITUTO COLOMBIANO DE BIENESTAR FAMILIAR, BOGOTA, Colombia, ²ASOCIACION COLOMBIANA DE TERAPIA OCUPACIONAL, BOGOTA, Colombia

Colombia has experienced since the 40 internal confrontation linked increasingly complex and interrelated variables such as political differences, the presence of guerrilla groups, paramilitaries, drug trafficking, the influence of those in politics and policy and a response exercise state marked on military action.

Within this panorama, the civilian population has received the most expensive collection of this conflict: the loss of their communities, their land, family and his life ... as if you knew the lead. These people expect alternatives to rebuild their lives, have a valid, respected and able to exercise an occupation that re-raise.

That is why we think of a bet from Occupational Therapy in actions of reparation for victims and the violence that framed the importance of decent jobs that empower people as socially engaged - makers of occupation and to enhance the recovery of the social fabric is a significant challenge for our professional work.

This work aims to generate concerns and proposals to strengthen the performance of occupational therapists in the approach of repair projects, ranging from lessons learned internationally and in Colombia with actors of civil society, international cooperation, the state and the same communities.